This petite, yet fierce Asian wanderlust dreamer is definitely a true beauty with brains! She had disappeared from the modeling scene for quite some time now, due to her health struggles. But the love from and for her fans has brought her back!

We were lucky enough to get some time with her, as she discloses her bio:

Coming from a typical Asian family, where education with a science background was always priority, I never even thought about modeling until after I achieved my Bachelor of Science in Molecular Biology and Biochemistry. At that point in my life, I definitely had a tough time figuring out my true passion, as I was torn between my interests in music and arts and my parents' expectations of me in science medicine. So I just took a break and accepted modeling opportunities that came my way. In the short duration, I was featured in a number of calendars, magazines, newspapers, websites, trade shows, car shows, fashion shows and various projects and promotions, and everything was awesome. But there was little opportunity in Calgary, and it was hard flying all the time, being away from family and friends. So I decided to hit the books again to wrap up what I had already started. I wanted to pursue a profession that would please my parents to show them my respect and appreciation for all that they had sacrificed for my future. However, life is too short not to follow your passion, and yet too long to be living without your passion. So for the longest time, I couldn't figure out what my true passion is, and how I could make my parents proud of me, without devoting my life to fulfill their dreams. But one thing led to another and then everything just came together like the pieces in a puzzle to complete me, who I am, and who I want to be. And I then realized that my true, ultimate passion is skin – whether it's expressing skin beauty through art, or preserving skin health through science. Conveniently, both my professions go hand in hand, as being knowledgeable in skin science and anti-aging enables me to care for my skin's health and prolong my modeling career. So now that I've completed my studies in laser and medical aesthetics and my Medical Laser and Aesthetic Skin Center is well established, I have more time to accept modeling opportunities that are knocking on my door. I love modeling and I think that all women are beautiful in their own unique way. I just want to put my art out there to represent and express women's beautiful femininity

If you would have asked me if modeling was anything I've considered before, I would've told you no. My dream is to one day be a nurse in the NICU unit.

Modeling has never crossed my mind until almost a month ago. Now, here I am being featured in a magazine. It's like a dream I never had, coming true.

MARIECLARK

As for her background, Marie graduated college from a two-year Office Administration Program and worked a typical 9-5 office job until her family grew. She feels fortunate to have had the chance to remain at home for a few years after their third son was born.
